See the route. Know the arrival.

Give customers a clear arrival view and your business a practical way to follow active jobs.

Keep customers informed

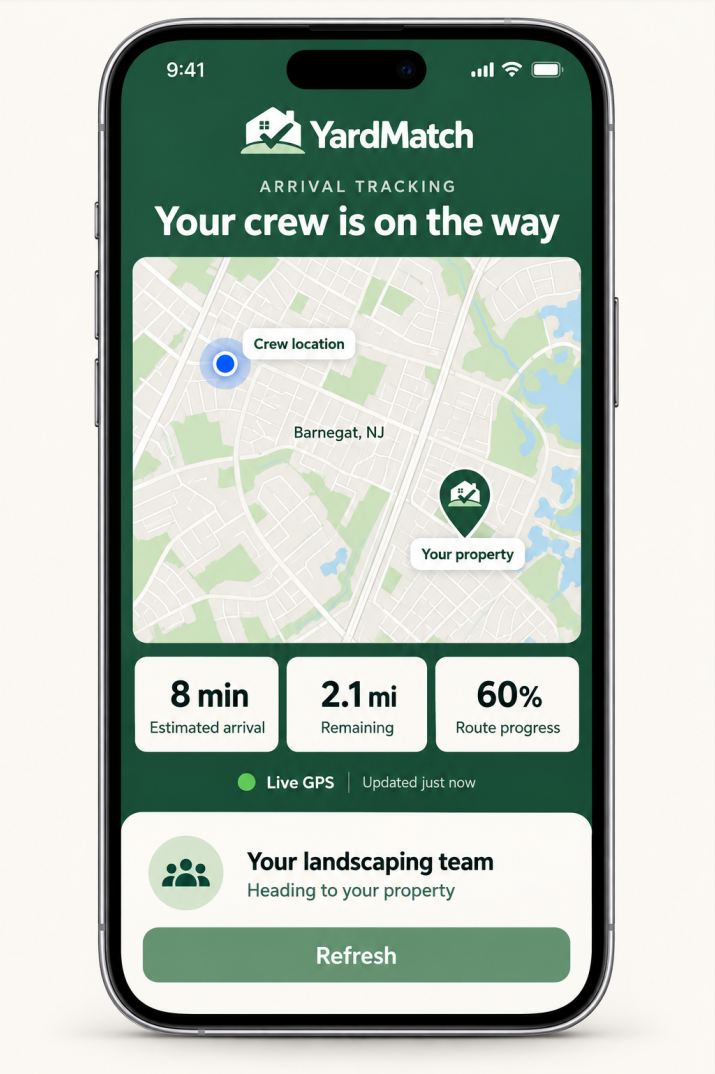

Customers can open their booking to see the shared route location, estimated arrival and distance remaining. It helps them plan for the visit without another check-in call.

See active-job progress

Open a job to check its arrival status, route progress and latest location update. See the journey toward the property while coordinating the day.

Coordinate the next step

Starting the route sends an on-my-way update. If a delay or access issue changes the plan, keep the update attached to that same booking.

Illustrative tracking screen. Map, time and distance shown are sample data.

Clear about what is live. GPS sharing needs location permission, a connection and the sharing app open during the active route. Estimated or paused updates are labeled; arrival times are estimates.

What a real job feels like

Illustrative example: a Barnegat homeowner wants recurring mowing and your company has room on a nearby route.

1

The homeowner asks for lawn care.

They enter the property, desired timing and service. YardMatch gathers the details needed for a quote and a suitable time window.

2

YardMatch recommends your business.

Your service area, available capacity, service fit and quality signals support the match. The customer sees the recommendation and confirms; a few qualified backups are available if needed.

3

You organize the work.

Review the booking and property notes, coordinate the schedule, approve crew assignments and name a route leader. Everyone works from the same job details.

4

Track the arrival, then complete the visit.

Once the route starts, shared GPS location powers the arrival view. Customers can check the map and estimated arrival while the crew heads over, then the team records arrival and completion evidence.

5

The job closes and the relationship continues.

The customer sees the service record and can review the business. You see the settlement and payout status. Recurring service or a rebooking keeps the relationship moving.

When the day changes: weather delays, access issues and quality concerns stay attached to the booking so the customer, business and support team can coordinate.

Grow around the routes you have.

The goal is profitable repeat work and reliable service. More inquiries alone do not solve a crowded schedule or a thin margin.

A shorter path to a booked job

Customers start with what they need. YardMatch recommends a qualified business, reducing the effort between searching for help and confirming a visit.

A stronger repeat-service loop

Recurring mowing, rebooking prompts and seasonal reminders create opportunities to serve the same customer again. A proven prior provider can be preferred when still eligible and available.

A tighter service area

Set a realistic radius and available time. Start with nearby work that fits existing routes, then expand only where travel time and staffing still make sense.

A clearer staffing picture

Crew profiles and availability help you find and organize field help. You review matches and assignments; workers do not need to own a landscaping company to contribute.

YOU KEEP RUNNING YOUR BUSINESS

You manage the company profile, offered services, service radius, availability and crew assignments. Your business remains responsible for equipment, supervision, insurance, service quality and crew compensation.

Recommendation order is based on fit and reliability; paid placement does not buy a better match. Repeat bookings still depend on customer choice, availability and good service.

Know what each job leaves you.

YardMatch earns provider-funded fees on completed work. The same fees support the marketplace, booking tools and service coordination.

$30 once

After the first completed job for each customer / provider pairing.

$6.99 per job

On every completed job, including the first visit.

YardMatch absorbs payment-processing cost under this model. Fees are deducted from provider proceeds, and your business pays its crew.

ILLUSTRATION: ONE CUSTOMER, TEN $60 VISITS

	First visit	Next 9 visits	10-visit total
Customer service charges	$60.00	$540.00	$600.00
One-time finder fee	-$30.00	$0.00	-$30.00
Completed-job fees	-$6.99	-$62.91	-$69.90
Provider proceeds	$23.01	$477.09	$500.10

Illustrative math, not a service quote or earnings forecast. Assumes ten completed, fully paid visits with the same business, no refunds or adjustments, and the fee model above. Provider proceeds are before labor, fuel, equipment, insurance, taxes and other business costs.

The owner takeaway: the first visit carries an acquisition cost. Repeat visits spread that cost across the relationship. Judge each route by what remains after your actual costs; a payout is not profit.

Start with a small local route.

Suggested partnership approach: use YardMatch to add a manageable pocket of business around the work you already do.

START NARROW

Begin with recurring mowing and seasonal cleanup in Barnegat. Add nearby areas you already serve only when staffing and travel time support them. Other services depend on your capabilities, credentials and local coverage.

A FOCUSED 30-DAY TRIAL

01 Set up the business

Complete the profile, verification and payout setup. Choose service boundaries and a realistic amount of open capacity.

02 Run the first visits

Coordinate crew assignments, document the work and review customer feedback and any scheduling issues.

03 Decide whether to expand

Compare repeat bookings, proceeds after job costs, drive time, admin time and reliability before adding capacity.

Trust starts before the visit.

Your business profile, service scope, insurance and required credentials support provider verification. Clear property notes and crew assignments help set expectations.

Accountability after the work.

Job notes, service photos and customer reviews stay tied to the visit. Support reviews issues against that record; refund or dispute reviews can hold payouts.

Let's pick one route, agree on the numbers and see whether YardMatch can bring you repeat work worth keeping.
